The Last Supper Festival is an indoor-outdoor multimedia event occurring annually in Brooklyn, NY during the crux of seasonal change at the end of September. Celebrating the symposium of genres at one dinner table, the show harvests local talent, engages neighboring communities and proceeds benefit the Food Bank For New York City.

FEATURING 13 short films from emerging directors, 13 artworks from budding visual artists, 13 dishes from innovative food artists and music from 7 talented bands and DJ's. Event hosted by Teman & Teran Evans. Art exhibition September 20th-October 12th.

CURATION Our occupation of the landscape is becoming increasingly primed for creative analysis as environmental disasters and socio-economic crisis continue to effect our daily lives. The landscape of this upheaval is represented by ongoing events such as the global food crisis, climate change and rising health risks due to consumption. To interpret our environments through creative mediums, especially with an audience of peers, is to spark a critical conversation and invite progressive ideas to the table. The Last Supper works explore themes from local to global landscapes and tackle issues of social, emotional, political and geographic importance.

HISTORY What began four years ago as an intimate word-of-mouth dinner party in a small backyard has evolved organically into what is known today as The Last Supper Festival. The event, which falls in late September—thus symbolically marking a change of seasons—is a multimedia experience that challenges the traditional methods of exhibiting and viewing artwork. Instead of singular artistic moments, the festival presents, in concert—just as it unknowingly did at the original backyard dinner party—a range of artistic mediums from local emerging talent including visual art, culinary art, film, performance and music—ie: a stimulation of all five senses. This unique approach to curation blurs the defined creative boundaries, thereby facilitating an exchange and connection between various artists, communities and audiences.

FUNDRAISER Pre-party fundraiser Saturday September 6th at Oulu in Brooklyn. See website for details.
